TIPS FOR HELPING KIDS TRANSITION TO MIDDLE SCHOOL

Before School Starts

Middle school can bring many new experiences for kids like switching classes, using lockers, and having more independence. Here are some things you can do before the big day to help your child feel less anxious and more confident:

- Get to know the school. Attend your school's back-to-school night or open house. If that isn't possible, schedule a time when your child can come see where their classrooms are and learn the layout of the school.
- Talk to your child about who they can reach out to at the school for help with different things.
- Practice new tasks and routines. If your child will be using a locker for the first time, make sure they spend time practicing opening and closing the lock.
- Work with your child to set up organizational systems. Switching classes may mean that they need many different folders, binders, etc. Help your child find ways to keep track of their things.

Managing Feelings

Starting middle school can bring up a lot of feelings for kids. Here are some tips for helping your child work through these in a positive way:

- Model a positive attitude. Let your child see that you are excited about the school year.
- Ask your child to share the things they are most excited about and the things they are most nervous about.
- Remind them that their feelings are normal and okay!
- Teach positive ways to cope with feelings like talking about them, deep breathing, and using positive self-talk.
- Reflect on ways that your child has adapted to new situations in the past, and remind them that they can do it again!

Starting School

It is normal to be nervous on the first few days of school! Here are some ideas to help your child feel more calm:

- Make sure your child has what they need. Knowing that they have what they need for the day can give your child one less thing to worry about.
- Remind your child that everyone in their grade is new to the school, and that it may take some time to get used to the new routines.
- Be available to listen to anything your child wants to share about their new experience.
